

INDEPENDENTS DRIFT DAILY TO DEMOCRACY

Prominent Republicans in Boston
Organize a Wilson Campaign Club.

ANOTHER MOOSE LEADER IN BROOKLYN CHANGES

Quietly But Steadily the Tide of the Nation's Vote is Turning To President Wilson

With prominent Boston Republicans organizing a Woodrow Wilson Campaign Club to work for the President's re-election and with Arthur Slesinger, another Progressive leader of Brooklyn, announcing that he will take the stump for Wilson, the tide of Independent votes is rolling steadily upon Democracy's shores.

Every day brings further proof that the drift toward Wilson is going to be complete. Many of the Independents who had waited hopefully upon the sounding of Mr. Hughes's keynote are at last making acknowledgment of their keen disappointment. Some of them are content to pledge their support to President Wilson. Others go one point further and bitterly assail the policy of the Republican party.

In coming out for the Democratic ticket Mr. Slesinger, of Brooklyn, characterized the campaign utterances of Charles E. Hughes as "what could be heard from any old woman over any back fence." Continuing he said:

"I am an ex-Republican, but was always a radical Progressive within that party. When the Bull Moose party was formed I joined it, not because of Colonel Roosevelt's revolt, but because of the principles in its platform. I am a platform Bull Moose, not a T. R. Bull Moose, and I refuse to be delivered by that gentleman just to help put back the Republican party in power.

"I fail to see how the Hemmingsways, the Barnesses, the Penroses and the pussfoot Cranes have in any way purged themselves of the charges Colonel Roosevelt made against them and I refuse to be delivered over to Mr. Hughes just to rehabilitate that corrupt plunderbund.

"Mr. Hughes in all his speeches has not advanced any propositions for the general betterment of the country, and what he has said so far I could hear any day in any week from any old woman over any back fence I happened to be near.

"While I am not a sympathizer with the Democratic party generally, I believe that Mr. Wilson has done more during his tenure of office to promote advanced political measures for the benefit of the people generally than any President since Abraham Lincoln, and I shall therefore support him to the utmost of my endeavors and as soon as convenient I will take the stump in his behalf."

Boston Republicans Organize

A dispatch from Boston says that so many favor Woodrow Wilson for President for another term that they have formed an organization to take an active part in the campaign. They met at the Boston City Club and took steps to form a Woodrow Wilson campaign club. Among those present from the metropolitan district were Charles H. Jones, president of the Commonwealth Shoe and Leather Company, one of the foremost business men of Boston, who seems to be the head and front of the movement; George R. Nutter, John F. Moors, who has been for years one of the leading independent forces in political movements in Boston; Major Robert E. Green, formerly on the staff of Gov. Walsh; Reginald M. Hall, Edmund J. Burke, Robert H. Schacht, F. G. Goodale, Alexander Banwart and Ellery Sedgwick, the editor of the Atlantic Monthly.

This was a preliminary meeting for the purpose of organization and the consideration of a list of names of Republicans and Progressives who have so numerously expressed their desire to support Wilson that it was thought that they ought to be organized as an independent organization for the campaign. Another meeting will be held in the near future in order to perfect the organization for work for Wilson.

Leagues Working Hard In West
A dispatch from San Francisco to Democratic National Headquarters in New York says:

"Prominent Republicans and Progressives of Alameda County have just met in Oakland, and organized a local Woodrow Wilson Independent League. Delegates from all parts of the county attended. All the delegates reported the Wilson sentiment growing daily. Among the organizers were: I. J. Truman, a San Francisco attorney residing in Oakland; Walter S. Gannon, manufacturers' agent; J. J. Brennan, former Republican county committeeman, and Edward Elliott, of the law faculty of the University of California. Weekly meetings of the organization will be held."

Thirty-eight Woodrow Wilson State Leagues of Oregon have held a general conference at Portland to organize for effective campaign work. They had a banquet and awakened much enthusiasm. About thirty counties were represented.

More Recruits Wanted for Company I.
Capt. F. H. Mickle of recruiting office, stationed in Harrisburg is on hand to secure troops to fill up the companies of the Eighth Regiment. They would like to have from 60 to 70 men from this district, and want men who can operate autos, mechanics of various kinds, and bakers. On the border the officers live with the men. These men will be taken to Mt. Gretna for about two weeks and then transferred to the border for whatever service may be required.

The climate of the border is very hot, yet very delightful, strong breezes going all the time. The nights are cool for good rest—so cool that blankets must be used. The soil is sandy with little vegetation outside of the cactus. Water is piped to camp in ample supply and is good. It is constantly tested to prove its freedom from germs.

The hours of actual duty while on the border is from seven to ten, school from ten to eleven, and the balance of the time the company has off for sight seeing or any chosen pastime.

The enlistment must be for three years active duty and three years of reserve; making six years in all. When troops are withdrawn from border duty they will come back with the Bedford company. There is no telling how long the troops will be on the border, it may be two, three or six months. This depends on the state or condition of the government of Mexico.

Capt. S. T. Statler is the local agent but Capt. Mickle will spend the rest of this week and the first of next in receiving recruits. The government enlists unmarried men only at the present time.

Besides the patriotic side, the recruits will have an excellent opportunity to get all kinds of experience and see the conditions of things in the southern territory, experience the southern climate, southern hospitality and southern manners.

Special Services

There will be something special about all of the services at St. John's Reformed Church on next Sunday. In the morning at eleven o'clock the pastor, Rev. J. Albert Eyler, will preach upon the subject: "The Battle Cry of Peace—what does patriotism require of us?" At 7:30 p. m., the service will be unique. No sermon but a program of music. Some of Bedford's best talent will take part. No admission will be charged and the invitation is extended to the public.

An Assault

On Saturday evening a brutal assault was made upon an estimable young lady of Middlesburg. It appears that the lady had walked a short distance on the way home with another lady who had called on her, and on her return, when near the residence of Mr. Woodcock, she was met and assaulted by an Italian. Her screams for help were unheard. She returned to her home in a semiconscious condition, clutching in her hand a red handkerchief, which she had torn from the neck of her assailant. After her almost inarticulate account of the occurrence a search was instituted for the brute, and he was found at the furnace on Sunday afternoon, without the red handkerchief, which usually concealed his dirty neck and wearing the hob nail shoes which were plainly in evidence at the scene of the struggle. After his arrest, and identification by his victim he was taken to Bedford and given good board at the expense of the people of the county.—Saxton Herald.

ITALIAN A MURDER VICTIM

May Have Been Shot to Death and Thrown from an Auto.

The coroner's jury in the case of the unknown man found dead along the pike about two miles from Jennerstown Sunday, returned a verdict to the effect that the man came to his death from three gunshot wounds at the hands of some person or persons unknown. It was found impossible to identify the body, although it was the general opinion that the man was an Italian who had been murdered as the result of some well-planned scheme.

According to indications shown by examination of the body and the clothing, the man had never done any hard work. His hands and flesh were soft, his clothes of fine texture and his shoes of expensive make. A silk handkerchief was around his neck and two in his pockets. The shoes are believed to have cost at least $7 a pair.

The only possible mark of identification found was the name "Houmann," evidently that of a shoe dealer, stamped on the shoes. It is not known where this dealer is located.

The body was found Sunday by an automobile party in the bushes a short distance from the road. It had evidently been thrown out of an automobile or other vehicle and dragged into the brush and concealed. A woman who lives not far from the scene says that she heard six shots in rapid succession Friday evening. There were three bullet wounds on the body two of them probably fatal.

The man was about five feet, eight inches tall, weighed between 160 and 170 pounds and was fair, smooth shaven and had two old scars in the chin. His hair was black and eyes brown. The clothing included a fine grey suit and a silk striped shirt. The shoes had rubber heels.

WILSON WINS WITH- OUT "SOLID SOUTH"

Columbia College Summer Students
Give President Big Majority
Over Hughes

PLURALITY OF 368 OVER
OPPONENT, TOTAL 2,144

Straw Ballot Arouses Widespread
Interest and Politicians Find
Some Surprises

Wilson 1,216; Hughes 848

That is the way the students from all parts of the United States attending the summer session of Columbia University, New York, stand on the Presidential race.

A straw ballot has been taken by the college daily, The Spectator which has awakened widespread interest throughout the country. With exceptional regard for accuracy, the college editors went about the task of sounding the student body and it required four days for them to complete the vote.

With flaming headlines The Spectator came out at the completion of the straw ballot announcing a "LANDSLIDE FOR WILSON." It was a breezy specimen of college journalism, and reminded one of the big dailies on the day after a real Presidential election.

Even the wisest of the politicians have been studying the results of this college ballot for President. It is really significant in that it gives an inkling of how the representative citizens of nearly every state in the Union stand in the campaign. The 2,144 votes of these students represent groups of students who have but recently come from their homes in practically every state of the country. They are not students who have been at the college for a whole term, or for any length of time. They recently left home for the summer course, and will, probably, all be back in their homes in time to vote in the real election.

Wilson Without the South

One thing of particular interest in this college ballot is that even without the "Solid South" President Wilson gets a handsome majority over Hughes. Another surprise to the Republican contingent was that the President carried many of the Central Western states which the Republicans have been claiming both in and outside of college walls. Still another surprise to the Republicans came when 552 women were counted for Wilson against 326 men.

Wilson showed great strength among the students from the far West, carrying California by 15 to 16, the State of Washington by 10 to 3, Oregon, the other Pacific coast state showed 4 for Wilson and 5 for Hughes in the students' ballot.

The contest in New England states was particularly interesting to students of the present campaign. From Maine 7 students voted for Wilson with 10 against him, and Massachusetts was closer still with 40 for Wilson and 43 for Hughes. The women from Massachusetts gave Wilson a majority over Hughes, their vote standing Wilson 19, Hughes 11.

That the South will remain solid in the present campaign may be judged by the following results: Georgia, Wilson 87, Hughes 4; Alabama, Wilson 24, Hughes 5; Texas, Wilson 45, Hughes 4; Virginia, Wilson 75, Hughes 6; North Carolina, Wilson 46, Hughes 7; South Carolina, Wilson 40, Hughes 0.

Republican politicians will ponder perhaps on this from Pennsylvania: Wilson 91, Hughes 83.

And what will the Republicans think to see 5 students for Wilson from saucy little Rhode Island and only 3 for Hughes.

The vote for the Socialist labor party candidate was very small as was also the vote for ex-Governor Hanly, of Indiana, the candidate of the Prohibition party.

The grand total vote of 2,400 was greater than has ever been taken in a college straw ballot, and never, perhaps did any college voting arouse such interest.

Before returning Mrs. Shaffer and Mr. Shaw made a trip to California visiting Sacramento, San Francisco, Santa Barbara, Los Angeles and San Diego, taking in the exposition and all places of interest. While in Santa Barbara the ladies called on O. W. Smith and family, formerly of Bedford and finding them all in good health and enjoying their cozy surroundings. At Los Angeles, they spent a very enjoyable day at J. W. Imbler's fine home and had the pleasure of picking oranges, lemons, grape fruit and figs from their grove. Their son Reuben returned along the foot hills, through the numerous groves of tropical fruits. While in California the ladies were very much impressed with the bungalow homes and lawns covered with beautiful flowers, palm trees, etc.

INCREASING DRIFT TO THE PARTY OF PEACE

Speeches of Mr. Hughes Fail to Check Tide of Independents
to Wilson

RAILROAD MEN CANVASSED THROUGH SOUTH DAKOTA

Interesting Reasons Given by Individuals in Announcing Change
of Party for Wilson's Policies

Late dispatches from the far West
tell of a great drift of independent voters to the Democratic presidential ticket.

Progressives are actually organizing Wilson clubs; "life-long" Republicans are declaring themselves for Wilson and peace; socialists and foreign-born are declaring themselves
for the administration that has shown antagonism to "vested interests and special privilege."

Every day brings confirmation that the independent vote added to a united and loyal Democracy will re-
elect Woodrow Wilson as President of the United States.

This drift to Wilson seems to have been stimulated rather than checked
by the speeches of the Republican candidate for President in the Central West Continuous and unreasonable criticism, by its very monotonous
harangue, is often apt to divert votes to the opposition rather than win them, and this appears to have been the result of Mr. Hughes' manner of campaigning.

Even before Mr. Hughes made his first speech at Carnegie Hall, New York, this drift to the Democratic party had made great headway.

David Lawrence, writing to the New York "Evening Post" from Washington, gives some interesting facts which have an important bearing on the campaign. Basing his calculations on letters which are pouring
each day into the White House from all parts of the country and which he has had opportunity to see, Mr.
Lawrence says the President will probably get more than twenty percent. of the Progressive vote.

"These letters have a true ring to them," Mr. Lawrence writes. "They come from men who have no desire for political preferment, but whose hearts throb with the impulses of progressive principles and popular rule."

Mr. Lawrence says the reason
these writers give for coming out
some of them reluctantly and others
very enthusiastically for Wilson are,
in a nutshell, that while Hughes is a man of excellent personality, he has a leaning toward reactionary Republican doctrine and that the party
which he leads in the present race
has not reformed a particle since 1912; that Woodrow Wilson, on the other hand, is a man of similarly high character, but he has initiated
the process of regeneration in the Democratic party and is actually putting on the statute books progressive legislation.

GOODS ON APPROVAL

Little Talks on Health and Hygiene
by Samuel G. Dixon, M. D. LL. D.
Commissioner of Health.

It is the custom with many firms
to send certain classes of goods to their customers homes on approval.
If they are not satisfactory the prospective purchaser has the privilege of exchanging them. Obviously it is impossible for the salesman to know
what conditions are in the house
where such goods go, who handles
them and how they are tried or examined. The possibility of spreading communicable disease is very real.

When new things go into a home,
curiosity and interest is naturally aroused in all the members of the family. Children and adults join in the examination.

Of course where there are cases of communicable disease which have been reported and quarantined no
goods are delivered on approval.
There are often cases of diseases,
however, in the early stages unrecognized or so mild in form as to make it seem unnecessary to call a physician. Into these homes merchandise is delivered without question.

Modern salesmanship is far removed from the sharp barter of earlier days and fair dealings and honest representation are recognized as necessary foundations for success.

Sending goods on approval however, is carrying things so far that it may result in harm to the purchaser.

RHEUMATISM ARRESTED

Many people suffer the tortures of lame muscles and stiffened joints because of impurities in the blood, and each succeeding attack seems more acute until rheumatism has invaded the whole system.

To arrest rheumatism it is quite as important to improve your general health as to purify your blood, and the cod liver oil

maker, while its medicinal nourishment
strengthens the organs to expel the impurities and rebuild your strength.

PROGRESSIVE LEADER IN CALI. DENOUNCES HUGHES AND MACHINE

Rowell Indignant at Old
Guard Snubs of Moosers

HINT OF INDEPENDENT WAR ON G. O. P. NOMINEE

Republican Attitude Toward Progressives Threatens to Renew Breach

By William Hoster

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 20.—Mr.
Hughes' troubles multiply. He is facing a state-wide and maybe a nation-wide Progressive revolt.

Chester Rowell, Progressive leader
and member of the Republican national campaign committee, has denounced the Republican candidate for abandoning the Progressives of California to the old guard wolves.

Rowell's denunciation of Hughes
points to an impending Progressive
war on the candidate which may easily react on the situation in every state in the Union, especially in the doubtful states.

Rowell laid the situation before
Hughes made his auditorium speech here. He didn't spare words, and he frankly told Hughes that while a kind word for the Progressives might do him some slight injury, to permit
the old guard to continue its man-handling of the Progressives would do him incalculable harm thruout
the country.

Hughes, with full knowledge of both sides of the controversy, thereupon handled the situation in this fashion in his address:

"I come here as spokesman of the national Republican party. With local differences I have no concern.
The great national aim that we have
in view transcends all local differences and we are together, reunited,
inspired by the loftiest traditions of our historic party, and devoted to the accomplishments of those great achievements upon which must rest
our enduring prosperity as a nation."

Calls It Baby Pap

"That," said Rowell, "is feeding
the people of California baby pap.
The Progressives of California are adults. Mr. Hughes might better have said nothing at all, which would have been the wisest course, than
thus to ignore the claims of the Progressives. He has spilled the beans.
They can be spilled, of course, if
Mr. Hughes sees fit. But up to the present, I don't know whether he will or not."

There was a rumor that Rowell
had been authorized to go get Governor Johnson and asked him to preside at the Sacramento meeting on Tuesday. Rowell declared he had heard nothing of it, nor was he aware of any plan to bring Hughes and Johnson together before the candidate leaves the state.

Continuing his interview Rowell
said:

"The meeting at the Auditorium
was a fiasco. At least a dozen Progressives told me this. One of them,
the most prominent Progressive on the coast next to Governor Johnson, called me on the telephone this morning and told me the only thing
that kept him from declaring for Wilson was his attachment to Governor Johnson.

"He said he was startled at the way the meeting went Friday night."

This reference was to the lack of genuine enthusiasm, which characterized the meeting. It was the biggest crowd that ever gathered under one roof at a political meeting in San Francisco. But the Progressives
were sullen and the old guard Republicans defiant.

It is to be remembered that Rowell, who is making these statements
is a member of the Republican campaign committee. What he says,
however, is merely echoing the expression of scores of other Hughes
men, both Republicans and Progressives.

Convinced

"Do you know anything about
suburban real estate?" "Not a thing.
And it has cost me a lot of money to find out that I didn't too."

THE VOTES THAT WILL DECIDE.

At the time Theodore Roosevelt declined the Progressive nomination for president, following the naming of Mr. Hughes by the Republicans, it was obvious that the latter's election would depend upon three things—First, the attitude of Colonel Roosevelt; second, the impression
Mr. Hughes might make as a candidate and as one measuring up to the presidential office, and third, capture
by him of the Progressive vote, which constituted the balance of power. The first two factors, of course, would have an important bearing upon the third; the matter of overshadowing
concern, indeed, was the disposition of the Progressive vote thruout the nation.

Colonel Roosevelt unqualifiedly declared for Mr. Hughes and promised to do his utmost to insure his election. The colonel is not one of those who will vote for Mr. Hughes as a matter of patriotic duty, while secretly
resigned to his defeat; his support
is utterly sincere, because he believes that re-election of President Wilson
would be a national calamity.

Mr. Hughes' letter of acceptance left much to be desired. As to his present speech-making campaign,
not even his most ardent admirers
will assert that up to this time he has convinced the waiting public that he possess exceptional strength.

His sturdy integrity is a tremendous asset, and he is undoubtedly a man of high ability. Those who know him best are confident, too, that he has latent powers of attraction which will develop as the campaign proceeds. It is undeniable, however,
that six years of the cloistered existence of the supreme bench kept him
apart from the great issues and changes of that period, and he has much to learn of the forces operating in American life today.

No conclusive data exists upon which to base a forecast as to the Progressive vote, and judgment must be largely speculative. One condition,
however, is definite and obvious—
the Progressive strength has not swung entirely over to Hughes, despite confident predictions that Colonel Roosevelt's whole-hearted indorsement would have that result.
Neither has the decision of the Progressives to abandon the party organization for this year produced
that effect.

There is a persistent and aggressive minority which will not support
Mr. Hughes. The vocal members of this minority are not as numerous
as those who have declared for him,
and they have not so large a following. But it would be absurd to belittie the defection of such men as John M. Parker, of Louisiana; Judge
Lindsey, of Colorado; Francis J. Heney, of California; Matthew Hale, of Massachusetts; Edwin M. Lee, of Indiana; J. A. H. Hopkins, of New Jersey; Judge Norton, of Missouri;
Bainbridge Colby, of New York, and Henry M. Wallace. While they do not represent a majority in their respective states, their names carry great weight generally. In truth, the extent of their following is of less significance than the fact that the same reasoning which has governed their action will influence scores of thousands of Progressives in the same way.

These Progressives offer many arguments in support of their opposition to Hughes. They say, first, that there is a strong feeling of resentment over attitude prior to and during the conventions. The known liking of Progressives for Mr. Hughes and the probability that he would have received the Progressive nomination almost unanimously if he had
frankly made known his position,
have made his course seem to them
indefensible. Indeed, they charge
the destruction of their party largely to his persistent refusal to declare himself, and they hold it was ungenerous of him to put Colonel Roosevelt in a position where he had to abandon the organization which had so loyally stood by him.

There are those who, while believing thoroughly in Mr. Hughes' integrity and good intentions, contend that he has shown no adequate comprehension of the scope and meaning of Progressivism.

Others—all of his Progressive opponents, in fact—feel that however sincerely he might strive to promote Progressive policies, he would be powerless against the reactionary
forces that control the Republican party; they are satisfied his efforts
would prove as futile as those he made in behalf of constructive enactments when he was governor of New York. They lay great stress, too,
upon the argument that, regardless
of his personal merits, the effect of his election would be to restore the old order, the excesses of which caused the Progressive revolt four years ago.

The Progressive vote which goes to Wilson will not represent, however, merely opposition to Mr. Hughes. There are a large number of Progressives who strongly believe in President Wilson. We know this by experience, thru the protests which have reached us from readers who were virtually always in accord with us, but who do not follow us in condemning the record of the Wilson administration.

It must be remembered that Mr.
Wilson, because of his course as governor of New Jersey, was strong with Progressives even in 1912, and would have received a heavy vote from them against any other candidate
than Theodore Roosevelt.

The president has a lively sense of this fact, as is shown by the skill
and pertinacity with which he plays for Progressive support. Close analysis will usually show that the so-called progressive measures which he advocates are fatally defective, if not downright shams; but there is always sufficient appearance of merit in them to raise his standing
among supporters of Progressive doctrines.

His insistence upon the placing of Mr. Brandeis upon the supreme court bench and his championship of the federal child-labor law, are recent matters cited by these voters. A Progressive who favors Wilson is never
at a loss for such arguments. Furthermore, many Progressives in the middle west are better satisfied with President Wilson's attitude than they are with the robust doctrine of preparedness and the maintenance of national rights. They would have supported Colonel Roosevelt, even
with his strong views on these matters, because he represented so completely their convictions upon other issues and because they knew he had the experience and the ability to avert trouble. But they feel that Mr.
Hughes has not these saving qualifications, and they prefer to trust Mr.
Wilson.

How large the pro-Wilson minority
among Progressives is cannot be accurately stated. Several weeks ago
we gave it as our opinion that at least one-third of the strength of the party would go to the president, in which event Mr. Hughes' share would be only one-third, net. This estimate has been discussed by newspapers of all shades of political belief, and has been accepted very generally as conservative.

In our calculation we do not use the great Roosevelt vote of 1912, but the Progressive showing in 1914. At that time political conditions were chaotic, new national issues had arisen to obscure those raised by the Progressive party, and there was no national ticket to serve as a rallying point for all of the faith. Yet
under those conditions about 2,000-600 Progressives clung to the party cause. It is safe to assume that now
a much larger number—at least 2-500,000—must be classed as out and out Progressives.

If our estimate is sound, then
there are upwards of 800,000 Progressives who, as matters now stand, intend to vote for Mr. Wilson. Our judgment has received support from polls since made. Inquiries addressed to 150 Progressive state committees in New York showed only 100

for Mr. Hughes, while among enrolled voters those who replied were divided as follows: Hughes, 5248. Wilson, 1653. Of those not replying,
the Wilson proportion would undoubtedly be larger.

A few days ago a secret poll was carefully taken in a large printing establishment in Philadelphia, all departments, from executive staff to pressroom, participating. Of 103
who voted for Roosevelt in 1912, only 51 will vote for Mr. Hughes; 30 will support Mr. Wilson, while the others are made up of those who are undecided or will vote for the Socialist or Prohibition candidates.

Nothing in these tests justifies a positive prediction, but the fact remains that wherever one dips into the Progressive vote a strong Wilson sentiment is found. The president's admirers insist that our estimate of
one-third for him is too low.

The Hughes problem is to win back these Progressives. In this task he can count upon three factors. The first is that many of them are naturally Republicans; the second is the influence of Colonel Roosevelt; the third is the force of attraction
which Mr. Hughes can exert himself.
There is absolutely nothing else. The Republican organization and all its works are hateful to the Progressives. If they are to be won, it must be thru the efforts of Mr. Hughes and Colonel Roosevelt and the Progressive press, which is virtually unanimous against Mr. Wilson.

Mr. Hughes' progress thus far is not inspiring to his supporters, and in California the effect made by him
is positively depressing. Altho in that state the Progressives are in a large majority, he has chilled their enthusiasm by emphasizing the fact that he is "the Republican candidate" and by disclaiming any concern over what he calls "local differences." Governor Johnson declared for Hughes before he announced his own candidacy for the United States senate, and that action carried more weight than any other one thing except the Roosevelt indorsement; yet
Mr. Hughes has permitted the organization Republicans to use his visit
as a means of fighting the governor,
and to prevent a meeting of the presidential candidate and the Progressive leader of a Progressive state.

Another ominous factor is that Mr.
Wilson is able to do things, while Mr.
Hughes can only criticize and promise. Passage of the navy increase bill, the child labor law and the rural credits measure suggests the advantage which the president has, and his activity in the great railroad labor controversy is another case in point. A consummate opportunist, caring nothing for consistency or logic, and wonderfully skillful in extracting political credit from any situation, he is a formidable antagonist. He clearly recognizes that the Progressive vote will be the decisive factor, and, with a considerable part of it already his, he will go to any lengths to win more.

Every inquiry brings one back to the conclusion that the balance of power rests with a minority of the Progressives, numbering perhaps 1-000,000; their votes will tip the scales one way or the other.

It is for these 1,000,000 votes that President Wilson is striving, with all the skill and persistence at his command. If he can win and hold them, he will be re-elected. And Mr. Hughes must attract a majority of them or suffer defeat.

PENNSYLVANIA IS STATE OF MANY VALLEY TOURINGS

Grand Circuit of Counties Is Rich
With Picturesque Stretches.

With mountain scenery of the most varied type, possessing spots interwoven with Revolutionary and Civil War history, Pennsylvania offers to her motorists a wealth of automobile tours unsurpassed by any State. Four mighty rivers belong to Pennsylvania and where there is a great river there is a ribbon of scenic beauty. Moreover, our State is rich in sequestered valleys, many of them are isolated from the world and inaccessible to any but motorists. Among these are the quaint communities of the Dutch and Shaker settlements.

Pennsylvania is indeed the State of beautiful valleys. Let the automobilist, standing at the threshold of his vacation, set forth in his car and discover his home land State. It makes little difference where he starts, or in what direction he goes, his course will traverse a natural park land.

A grand tour, however, that will circumscribe most sections of the State, and disclose every phase of the State's activity and development and one that will link many historical spots, takes Pittsburgh and Philadelphia as its natural basic points. The motorist of Pennsylvania may connect with this grand tour at his nearest point and travel in any direction he desires.

Setting forth, let us say from Pittsburgh, the tourist travels south through the so-called "coke" district, but which was as famous a region for travellers in the old stage coach days. He passes through Washington, Waynesburg and reaching Uniontown, turns north to Greensburg. From Greensburg he strikes east for Ligonier, a territory rich in historical interest, the site of an old fort and the scene of the early Indian fights. Two miles out of Ligonier is the home of Gen. St. Claire, friend of the early colonists.

From Ligonier the highway gradually ascends and the tourist passes through in the Westmoreland County State Game Preserve. Further on he visits Bedford, an historical old town and noted for its famous mineral springs and hotel resorts. Going east he passes the Crossings over the Juniata over Ray's Hill Mountains, the most beautiful scenery on the tour and enters a valley, Fulton Co. At the foot of the valley lies McConnellsburg, the seat of Fulton County, the only county in the State of Pennsylvania that cannot boast of a mile of railroad.

The next objective point is Chambersburg, where the Confederate Army invaded the North. To the east lies the town of Gettysburg and its famous battlefield.

From Gettysburg the route goes east through the heart of the famous "Pennsylvania Dutch" country, a land of snug, comfortable home and large stables. Many structures here date back to the Revolutionary War. After a visit at Philadelphia, the Delaware Water Gap, and the Pocono Lake and Pocono Mountains, the great show places of Pennsylvania.

From the Delaware Water Gap the tourist proceeds to Scranton and then Wilkes-Barre. From Wilkes-Barre the way strikes across the country to Eagles Mere, the summit of Sullivan County, which is noted for having a lake on the top of a mountain. There are no inlets to the lake; it is fed by underground springs. From Eagles Mere good roads take the tourist to Williamsport on the Susquehanna River.

From Williamsport the tour follows the Susquehanna River down to Harrisburg, where the traveller may well put in a day amid the beautiful buildings of the State capital. From Harrisburg the next objective points of the tour are Lewistown, Huntingdon and Altoona.

From Altoona the circuit of the grand tour is completed by way of Johnstown, territory of the old portage canal where canal boats were lifted over the mountains by incline planes. These planes are still visible. The entire last leg of the tour passes through scenic grandeur that cannot be excelled in the State.

JUDGE SAMUEL SEABURY
RECOMMENDED

As Head of New York Ticket—Wm. F. McCombs for United States Senator—Ticket Strong Throughout

The New York State convention met last Friday in Saratoga and besides adopting a strong platform and issuing strong criticisms of the Whittman Administration endorsed Judge Samuel Seabury of New York, for Governor, Wm. F. McCombs of New York, former Democratic National Committeeman, for United States Senator, Thomas Krentzer of Onondago, for Lieutenant Governor, Frank M. Stage, Erie, for Secretary of State, Joseph W. Masters, Kings County, Comptroller, Wm. W. Farley Broome, Attorney General, Maurice S. Cohen, Bronx, State Treasurer and a number of minor offices of State. The ticket is the strongest the Democrats could put up and has put the G. O. P. on their mettle.

Judge Seabury carried the State two years ago for the Bench by a majority of over 100,000 when the whole state Democratic ticket was defeated by over 100,000 due to the disgust when Tammany removed Governor Sultzer. The prediction is that Judge Seabury will add 100,000 votes to the ticket and that Wm. F. McCombs will hold Tammany to the support of the State ticket and that New York State will go Democratic this year by an immense majority.

Mr. Hughes is receiving much criticism for his petty potitics in his home State here from all quarters because he deplores in his speeches for president the very things he practiced when he was governor of New York.

He denounced the practice of appointing party men to office, yet when he was governor he appointed his lieutenants right and left. He criticized the present administration for extravagance in trying war times and yet when he was governor he was extravagantly so. He is the present Republican contingent. So his economic policies are falling by the wayside. He advocates women suffrage yet did not vote for it when he had a chance in 1915 in New York. He voted against an income tax in New York and vetoed a bill to place one on the statutes of the State and it is assumed that if he be elected to the Presidency, he will repeal the present National law and place the burden of tax on the poor people again. He stood for everything reactionary while governor of New York and for the wealthy class in every particular and against the poor people. His speeches indicate intervention in Mexico if he should be elected. This means protection of the wealthy interests in Mexico at the expense of American lives and should be rebuked by the voters.

AN EXPERIMENT

By FANNY GRAY.

After two weeks of blissful honeymoon in his modest new home, Harry Carr firmly believed that all newspaper jokes about newlyweds, including wife's biscuits, cranky cook stoves, burned steak and the like, were just newspaper jokes and nothing more.

Of course, there was a maid in the kitchen, but Harry never doubted for a moment that it was his bride, Molly, who really made it possible for these wonders to be evolved.

Now, Molly had about as much confidence in her own ability in the kitchen as Harry had, although she had never been put severely to the test, where everything depended upon her alone. So, when Bridget's first day out arrived, she and Harry both looked forward to it as a sort of lark. As they were drinking their coffee that morning, the following conversation took place:

"Now don't go and try to get up a regular dinner tonight, honey. I'm eating too much, anyway. And I won't have you getting all hot and tired working over a stove!"

"That's very sweet of you, Harry, but don't imagine that we can't have dinner just because Bridget is out. I shall enjoy getting it. And I don't think much of wives who set out cold bites because they're lazy. You'll see!"

"All right, pot, suit yourself, but be ready on time, and if the dinner is very good, I might have something in my pocket. It might be tickets for the Hippodrome!"

"Oh, how lovely! Of course I'll be on time. Don't miss the early train!"

In the middle of the afternoon, Molly descended to the kitchen, clad in a neat blue linen dress, and tackled the dinner.

About half-past five, Mrs. Webster, a near neighbor, who had made friends at once with Molly, rang the bell of the Carrs' house. Molly answered, sat down with her caller, and apologized for her dress. But she was so evidently nervous and left the room so many times on one excuse or another that her experienced friend began to realize that something must be wrong with the kitchen arrangements.

At last the truth came out and Molly explained her predicament, between tears and laughter.

"Why, Mrs. Webster," she cried, "it never occurred to me I couldn't get a whole dinner alone! I've done lots of cooking!"

"Come on out and let's see now had it is," suggested Mrs. Webster. It did seem rather hopeless. On the tables lay a fierce-looking collection of cooking utensils and dishes, all soiled. Mrs. Webster peered into everything, while Molly explained. Mock bisque soup being Harry's favorite, she had decided upon that, and had made it early to have it out of the way. There it stood on the back of the stove, a fine curdled mess, "keeping hot."

The roast beef she had put on good and early in the new double roaster, laboring under the delusion that the invention absolved one from giving any further attention to the meat. A glance at it, just before her neighbor's arrival, had revealed a little, dried-up, hard piece of beef, utterly unfit to serve.

Molly and Mrs. Webster looked at each other a moment and then cleared the atmosphere by laughing immoderately. When Molly could get her breath, she said:

"What shall I do? Of course, my pride is hurt, and I hate to tell Harry, but I suppose I must."

"Why tell him that you tried to get a dinner at all? He has suggested the theater, you say. It would be most natural for you to have a light supper to save trouble, as you may be going out."

"But I told him this morning I didn't mind the trouble, and that I was going to get dinner."

"Never mind. People sometimes change their minds. I don't want to corrupt your morals, but I advise you to do as I say. If you will, I can help you out."

Molly nodded assent.

"Good! Now, what salad have you got?"

"Lettuce and tomato."

"Couldn't be better. Any canned soup in the house?"

"Only ready-made tomato."

"The very thing! Haven't you learned the secret of putting hot milk and a bit of butter to that just before serving? Very likely it will be mistaken for your own brand of bisque."

"Great! You're a wonder, Mrs. Webster."

"No, just an old housekeeper. Now, I've got cold ham and a cream cheese I can spare, and I'm going to send them over. If by any chance you have your dessert, don't you see that with a pot of coffee you'll have a delicious and hearty supper, after all?"

At 6:30 Harry was met at the door by a smiling bride. He held up an envelope, teasingly, high above her head. "Do I get some food, or do we stay at home tonight? No nice dinner, no Hippodrome, you know."

"I guess I can get dressed in time," said Molly demurely, and, hand in hand, like two children, they went into the dining room.

As Harry took the last swallow of the delicious, piping-hot coffee, he remarked:

"Bully supper, Molly. Took my advice, after all, didn't you? I'm glad you didn't spend the afternoon fussing over a hot dinner."

Molly smiled at him across the table. Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Valuable Material Long Ignored.

Many years ago soap boilers used to have great difficulty in getting rid of a thick, evil-smelling liquid which was the chief by-product of their industry. They ran it into streams and sewers. Presently someone began collecting it and refining it. The result was glycerin as it is known today.

MOMENTOUS LEGISLATION

The Washington Post, an independent newspaper, says that next to the establishment of the Federal reserve system, which has reduced to a minimum the danger of sudden financial depression, the Federal farm loan act popularly called the rural credit law, is the most momentous piece of financial legislation written upon the statute books in the past score of years. It is doubtful whether the farmers as yet realize the full import of this new law. Just as the new banking and currency system gives to the business men of the nation a more elastic currency and greater facilities for credit, so the rural credit act extends to the farmers of the country the same quick credit that is now enjoyed by manufacturers and other business men.

The essence of the new rural credit law is in the establishment of a uniform rate of interest for the farmers. It will not help a lazy or shiftless farmer, but it will remove at once the hampering influences that have retarded the progress of men who have labored ceaselessly to get rid of debt in the operation of small and large tracts of land.

No longer will there be any gouging of the farmers, no matter where they may be located. No Federal land bank is permitted to charge more than 6 per cent per annum on its farm mortgage loans, and if one of these banks pays only 4 per cent on an issue of bonds, it cannot charge more than 5 per cent for the next farm loans it makes. Thus if those who now invest their money in farm mortgage bonds receive only 4 per cent on their investment, they will have the satisfaction of knowing that the farmer is paying only 5 per cent.

Farm lands, which are the very key stone of the nation's prosperity hitherto have not been considered a very good investment by the average citizen. To attract money to the farm loan field, however, the new law provides a method whereby those who have money to lend can find safe investments in the form of debentures or bonds of small and large denominations, issued by the banks and based on the security of mortgages on farm lands.

Not only a method, but an inducement, is thus offered for investments in agriculture.

Much will depend upon the initiative shown by the farmers themselves in the development of this new system. In its general effect, it is not unlike the building and loan associations which have grown up in all the large American cities and which have enabled so many working people to acquire their own homes. The associations which the farmers will form under the new system, virtually will dominate the twelve land banks which are to be established. They will pass upon the reputation and reliability of their own members. There will be a new community of interest among the farmers of the country and there should be an immediate strengthening and improvement in the agricultural resources of the nation in addition to the improvement in the condition of individual farmers.

Writing this new law upon the statute books Congress has performed a service not only to the farmers themselves, but to the whole country, whose prosperity is based in such large measures upon its agricultural resources.

BRYAN TO STUMP COUNTY

Former Secretary of State to Make Speeches for Congressman Bailey
WASHINGTON, Aug. 22.—Word has just been received from William Jennings Bryan that it is his intention to spend two days in the Nineteenth Pennsylvania district in the interest of Congressman Warren Worth Bailey. He has not indicated when he expects to be in that part of the county.

It is said that Congressman Bailey is tentatively planning to have Mr. Bryan make an automobile speaking trip through the district, one day to be spent in Cambria county, taking in Ebensburg, Patton, Barnesboro, Cresson, Portage and perhaps one or two other points en route, winding up in Johnstown at night, the next day to be devoted to Blair and Bedford counties, where Bedford, Everett, Saxton, Williamsburg, Roaring Spring, Hollidaysburg, Duncansville, Tyrone, and Bellwood will be visited, with Altoona as the night objective.

Mr. Bryan has spoken a number of times in Johnstown Altoona and Bedford.

Snakes, Gallies, and Poisonous Ones, Too.

One Wednesday morning, Mr. R. E. Gamble of near Yont's Station, Bedford township, was moving some boards on the site of his sawmill, when he spied a large snake crawling under one of them. He summoned Mrs. Gamble who got the shot gun, came to help dispatch the reptile. Mr. Gamble raised up a couple of boards, while Mrs. Gamble held the gun in readiness, to discover that there was a den of snakes instead of the one big one. Mr. Gamble grabbed the gun and fired two shots into the heap and forked out seventeen large copperheads. He killed all that were at home at the time. The largest measured three and a half feet, the mother snake, likely, and the others were no trifling length. That was the largest haul in numbers and length known in that locality. Mr. and Mrs. Gamble surely do feel and will feel creepy. Our first temptation in such a nest of snakes would be to "skin the patch."

MT. ZION

Mr. J. G. Collins and family visited relatives in Rainsburg on Sunday. Rev. James R. Logue preached a very interesting sermon at Mt. Zion on Sunday, it being his farewell sermon for the year.

Frank Adams, Dolis Lashley, Dell Kne and Daisy Dicken took quite an extended trip to Gettysburg three days last week.

Quite a number of the people from here attended the Children's Day service at the Artemas Brethren Church on Sunday.

Mr. Bruce Shaffer and Dora Means were Cumberland shoppers on Saturday.

Rev. and Mrs. Logue and Mr. and Mrs. Top Roland, called on Mrs. Agnes Means Sunday.

Rev. A. W. May preached his farewell sermon for the year at Mt. Hope on Saturday night.

Miss Dora Means and Sylvia Collins will attend conference at Gapsville this week, as delegates from Mt. Zion.

Frank Fletcher, wife and daughter of Black Valley and Miss Caroline Northcraft of this place left today for Cumberland, where Miss Northcraft will spend a week with her sister and relatives. They made the trip in Mr. Fletcher's car.

Harvey Miller had the misfortune of losing his horse and buggy at Chaneyville on Sunday night. While Mr. Miller was in the church listening to the service as all good boys should some one drove the horse away, took it out of the buggy and left it tied along the road. Be careful how you drive, when you are driving some one else's horse.

John Leasure of Cumberland is spending a couple of days with his father, B. F. Leasure.

William Dicken and Miss Barbara Cooper and daughter, Vera, spent Sunday at Caleb Cooper's.

Burton Barnes was a caller at B. F. Leasure's Sunday evening. Bill.

DEUTSCHLAND SIGHTED

ON SOUTHEAST COURSE
Newport News, Va., Aug. 23.—Captain Olsen of the Norwegian steamer Alf, which arrived here yesterday, says that on August 6, he passed the German merchant submarine Deutsch land proceeding at a very moderate rate of speed in an east and southeasterly direction.

Seeing the craft low in the water, with masts fore and aft, but with no sails set, Captain Olsen thought she was a sailing ship in distress. When he started toward her she submerged but soon returned to the surface. The submarine was in the regular steamer track south of Cape Race, longitude 51 west, latitude 41.40.

CHARTER ISSUED FOR NEW HOTEL

Cumberland Hotel Company is incorporated with Capital of $250,000

The State Tax Commission of Maryland Monday granted a charter to the Cumberland Hotel Company, a $350,000 corporation. The company, according to its application, has been formed to erect and conduct a hotel in Cumberland. The site is the McKaig block, Baltimore and Liberty Streets.

The stock is to be divided into 2500 shares of preferred and 1000 shares of common, both with a par of $100.

Is Grammar Essential?

Sometimes it is urged that formal grammar teaches children to write and speak correctly; but as all Americans have studied formal grammar, including newspaper reporters and sales women, there would appear to be no guaranty that formal grammar study leads to correct habits of speech. On the other hand, I once knew a school where for ten years not a minute was spent on formal grammar and, like the worm who does not miss a slice or two, no one ever knew the difference. Abraham Flexner, in the Atlantic.

Human Lobsters.

Many women are like the species of lobster which, if left upon the rocks by the receding tide, waits for the returning tide to float it from its temporary prison. There on the rocks it would remain to die, although a slight effort would enable it to reach the waves, tossing only a few feet below. There are many human lobsters, mere "lozgers on" of society, who are entertaining themselves with the idea that because they are women they are to be helped without putting forth any effort themselves.

Everybody's Sentimental.

The truth is that we are all sentimental at heart, whatever our culture. Even though we appreciate Brahms, shall we not find some pleasure in the repertoire of the hand organ, and though we admire Botticelli, shall we utterly condemn Daryl and Joan? There are moods in which Jean Ingelow and Mrs. Hemans are not mawkish. The thousands still weep over the death of Little Nell, though the critics sneer.—Robert M. Gay, in the Atlantic.

Insanity and Pyromania.

It used to be considered a possibility for an insane person to be a pyromaniac and exhibit his insanity in no other way than by setting fire to places, but this has been disproved, so much so that any freb who pretends to pyromania impulses must have other insane history or he cannot pass muster among alienists as permitted to swindle insurance companies with pretense of incendiary irresistible inclination.—Washington Post.

To Have Bright, Clear Light.

A smoking lamp or one with an unpleasant odor is usually caused by dirt. Soaking the wick and occasionally the burner in strong vinegar for an hour and then rinsing it in fresh vinegar and drying thoroughly will keep these parts clean.

Flash Light.

We don't mind a man's stretching the truth a little, but he could remember that he can get it so thin that there's nothing left of it.—Detroit Free Press.

THE NEW FORDS

Alterations Entirely Change Appearance of Car. Unbroken Body Lines.

The 1917 FORD, ready for delivery within the next two weeks, has undergone several changes which, with the reduction in price, will increase the demand more than ever. It has an entirely new radiator of black enamel, a sloping hood which eliminates any break where it joins the body, and the addition of crown fenders, front and rear, which conform to the curve of the wheels in the most modern fashion.

With the radiator enamelled there is very little brass about the car, only the filler and hub caps being of that metal. The shape of the new radiator is very pleasing in that there are no abrupt edges as in the type that has become familiar the world over, the new shell having rounded edges where the side parts curve into the top portion and the front edge is rounded over. The hood is an unbroken line from radiator to body proper and has a high finish.

The fenders are substantial, free from vibrations when in position on the car, and are well attached to chassis and body.

There are, also, two minor changes under the hood. One is the fitting of the shield around the fan, concentrating the air and insuring its going to the whole of the radiator surface, as an aid to cooling. The new electric horn is mounted on the rear right side of the cylinders, between them and the steering column. It is a vibrator type and is arranged to operate from the current of the flywheel magneto. The button is mounted on the steering column. They're selling rapidly. Get your order in NOW for early delivery.

A Gazette want ad; they bring results

The Philadelphia Record has hundreds of regular readers who live far beyond the bounds of the wide territory which it particularly aims to serve. Not long ago the management of the Record addressed an inquiry to some of these distant readers asking them why they prefer The Record to other prominent newspapers published nearer to their homes. Here is a typical reply:

"Because I regard your admirable journal as a fit newspaper for all the members of the home and domestic circle. It is comprehensive in its scope, educational, non-sensational, judicious, fair, and, what is most commendable, clear and intelligible to the average as well as the most cultured mind. Moreover, in its arrangement of news topics, foreign, domestic, state and local, religious and secular, every item or topic may be so easily located. I have often observed in handing my copy to a friend how quickly the attention of the reader becomes fixed, showing that The Record is not merely provincial or local in its scope, but satisfying to the wants of the general reader."

The qualities which give The Philadelphia Record precedence over other big city dailies in their own fields make it doubly attractive to readers in the territory to which its news columns devote especial attention. The intelligent public demands character and backbone as well as enterprise and alertness of journalism, and it finds these indispensable in the daily and Sunday issues of Philadelphia's leading newspaper.

The average Sunday newspaper consist of about 10 per cent, of meat, and 90 per cent, of fat, bone and gristle. The Sunday Record is all meat—a fact which obviously accounts for its enormous strides in circulation.

IMLER

Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Claycomb left on Wednesday for an extended trip to Pittsburgh and Ohio.

Mrs. McCluster and three children of Pittsburgh spent over Sunday here with her sister, Mrs. Cyrus Imler.

Elder Lindsey and wife of Duncansville are visiting their uncle, Dr. J. W. Lindsey.

Mrs. M. L. Imler is on the sick list. Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Truax and daughter Helen of Altoona spent Sunday at Chas. L. Imler's.

A new P. O. S. of A. Camp was started here last week with a membership of 34.

Mrs. Daniel Grabill of Roaring Spring visited friends here Saturday and Sunday.

The Imler Reunion of 1916 has passed into history but it will long be remembered as one of the big days at Imler. The weather man was on his good behavior and the day was ideal. Early in the morning the crowd began to arrive. Buggies and wagons and autos galore and both trains were crowded with passengers for Imler. The Osterburg and Pavia bands deserve special credit for the excellent music rendered. At 11 a. m. President, Cyrus L. Imler called for order, after which devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. J. H. Zinn. The came the invitation for dinner, and every person appeared to have enough to eat. After dinner an excellent program was rendered. Rev. W. H. Barkley of Illinois, Rev. J. H. Zehring, Dallstown, Pa.; Rev. Dittmar, of Hyndman; Rev. Zinn and Rev. Bachman each made an excellent address. Recitations were given by Miss Carrie Imler and Master Robert Imler, and a duet was rendered by Lillie Imler and Lillian Stuft. All left for their home rejoicing, happy for having been there.

Mrs. W. P. Griffith and Mrs. V. A. Stuft left for an extended visit to friends at Ridgely, Md.

PRUNING YOUNG FRUIT TREES IN SUMMER

YOUNG TREES PRUNED AND UNPRUNED.

(By J. C. WHITTEN, Missouri Agricultural College.)

Train up a fruit tree in the way it should go and when it is old it will not depart from it. It is easy and cheap to shape a young fruit tree so it will always have good form; it is difficult and expensive to shape an old fruit tree that has been neglected.

The main framework of the fruit tree should be shaped in early spring. Additional pruning should follow from time to time during the summer to further correct and guide the new growth.

The center of the young tree should be pruned out, leaving from three to five main limbs to form the framework of the tree. This gives a tree with an open center, to admit sunlight, and with broad-spreading limbs. A broad, low tree is easy to handle and fruits better. Much of the fruit can be picked without ladders. A low tree is easier to prune, spray and care for.

Peach trees are pruned most severely of any of our orchard fruits. In addition to thinning out surplus limbs, the main limbs should be cut back one-third to one-half of each season's growth. Cut to outward-growing side limbs, so as to favor an open, spreading top.

Japanese plums and nectarines should be pruned like the peach, and apricots and European plums essentially the same, but less severely so. Apples, pears and American plums should be given essentially the same shape of framework, but cut back with a medium degree of severity.

Sour cherries are pruned least of all our fruit trees at the Missouri agricultural experiment station. They should have the open center and spreading main limbs. The main limbs should not generally be cut back, as their terminal buds make the strongest growth. If a limb is in the way, it should be removed entirely instead of being cut back.

From time to time during the summer go over young trees to guide their growth. If too many limbs are starting from a given point, they may be thinned to the required number. If a rank limb tends to fill the center or cross other limbs, it may be removed. If the strongest limbs all grow in the same direction, thus giving a one-sided tree, they may be pinched back, thus encouraging other limbs to start or the opposite side to balance the framework of the tree. In the case of upright-growing varieties, particularly, the main limbs often tend to grow straight upward instead of spreading. In such cases the tips of these upright limbs may be pinched back. This will induce side limbs to grow outward, thus securing a spreading form.

DRESS PERCENTAGE OF FARM ANIMALS

That of Hogs Is 75, Cattle 53 and Sheep 48—Variation Due to Amount of Flesh.

(By W. H. PETERS, North Dakota Experiment Station.)

The average dressing percentage of hogs is 75 while of cattle it is 53 and of sheep 48. Part of this difference is due to the method of figuring. In the case of the hog the hide, head and feet are included in the carcass weight, while in the case of cattle and sheep the head, hide and feet are not included. Then the hog is very thick fleshed and has a small digestive system. Cattle and sheep have large paunches and digestive systems. Sheep dress out lowest due to the wool and the rather light fleshing of the carcass.

The dressing percentage of animals of each class varies widely. This is due to the amount of flesh, especially fat present on the carcass and somewhat to the thickness of the hide and size of the heads and legs, and to the amount of fill or the amount of feed and water present in the digestive tract at the time of slaughtering. For the hogs the dressing percentage varies from 65 to 85 per cent with an average of 75. For cattle it ranges from 47 to 70 per cent with an average of 53 and for sheep from 44 to 56 per cent with an average of 48 per cent.

GRAIN FOR CALVES THE FIRST SUMMER

First Aid Toward Profitable Baby Beef Production—Feed in Separate Lot.

Calves growing toward baby beefs should have grain the first summer if they are to develop rapidly, says the animal husbandry department at Iowa State college. One of the chances of loss in making baby beef is slow growth during the first summer when gains are cheapest of any time in the steer's life. Unless grain is fed, some of the milkfat will surely be lost when pasture dries up and flies are bad.

Shelled corn and oats, half and half, is a good mixture on which to start calves. Linseed meal can be substituted for oats, which is usually very high priced. Gradually increase the amount of oil meal and reduce the oats feed until calves are getting about seven parts corn to one of oil meal. The grain should be fed in a creep, as it will not pay to let the cows get at such high-priced feed. Place the creep in a shady spot where the stock collect during the day. Feed the calves all that they will clean up twice a day and "watch 'em grow to profit."

OVERHEATING HORSE MAY BE PREVENTED

Harm Can Be Avoided by Keeping Few Simple Things in Mind—Give Stimulants.

(By M. H. REYNOLDS, Veterinarian, University Farm, St. Paul.)

Horsemen need to be on their guard against overheating. Most cases of overheating can be prevented by keeping a few simple things in mind.

Give at least a pailful of water to each horse about ten o'clock and again at three or four o'clock on a hot day. Be very careful with a horse that is a little out of health, if you are working him on a hot day.

Look out for a horse that after sweating freely suddenly stops sweating. Put such a horse in the shade as soon as possible and give a moderate drink.

Do not put a horse not in good condition for hard work in the center of a four-horse team in hot weather.

Work carefully on a hot day when the atmosphere is moist and heavy. A horse can hardly get too hot to water, but one must regulate the amount by the temperature of the water.

In case of an attack of overheating, the horse should be taken to the shade as soon as possible. A treatment of the surface of the body, particularly of the head, with cold water should be given until the temperature is within a degree or two of normal. Stimulants should be given as early as possible.

In most cases it is better to plan to avoid overheating than to plan to treat the horse for it.

CATTLE RATIONS FOR MAKING FAST GAINS

Shelled Corn, Alfalfa and Cottonseed Meal Favored by the Nebraska Station.

Shelled corn, alfalfa hay, and cottonseed meal gave the fastest gains and greatest profit of any of the six rations fed in the recent cattle feeding experiment at the Nebraska agricultural experiment station at Lincoln. The other rations fed the different lots in the experiment were: Shelled corn and alfalfa; ground corn and alfalfa; shelled corn, alfalfa, and silage; shelled corn, alfalfa, silage the first four weeks, and Tarkio molasses feed the last 14 weeks; and shelled corn, alfalfa, and cottonseed meal the last six weeks.

The 60 head of two-year-old steers used in the experiment were bought for $6.75 and were sold at prices ranging from $9.50 to $9.75, or at a net profit of over $1.00. The cattle were fed in an open lot and under conditions similar to those found on the average corn-belt farm.

The Real Man

By
Frances Elizabeth Langton

(Copyright, 1916, by W. G. Chapman.)

"Marie, this is simply awful!"

"Oh mamma, mamma, why did you ever discover it!"

"Lucky I did!" snapped Mrs. Leeds.

"Do you wish to have your husband up to all kinds of misdoings and you ignorant of it?"

"Yes, I do, rather than have my heart broken. Oh, he is false, false and I wish I was dead!" and pretty Nellie Brierly, the bride of a year, burst into a torrent of sobs and tears.

"Don't get hysterical now," chided her practical, hard headed mother. "We don't know that it's all as bad as we think. Of course, the evidence looks conclusive, but we must watch and wait. Leave it to me, I'll soon know more. Trust me!"

This had happened: Mrs. Leeds had come to visit her daughter. She was a fussy, meddling individual. She had come across a coat of her son-in-law in his wardrobe and set at work to sew on a loose button. Then, feeling something in one of its pockets, she investigated to find a part of a written sheet and a photograph tied together with a bit of pink scented ribbon.

The portrait was that of a charming faced young girl. The fragment of paper read: "I go away believing that you love me. I shall come back firm in that same faith. I only hope my parents will see your proposal in a more favorable light, for if I do not marry you I shall not marry any other."

Both photograph and letter were crumpled and looked time worn. Apparently Walter Brierly had loved someone besides Nellie in the past, had never told Nellie about it and still cherished those mementoes of his old love.

Written Sheet and a Photograph.

Nellie tried to keep cheerful and not let Walter see that she distrusted him, for, as she came to think of her own, old-time beaux she did not consider a past flame of her husband so highly reprehensible, after all. But her mother stirred up things. One day she came to her daughter duly excited.

"Nellie," she said, "I'm sorry to disturb your peace of mind, but it is necessary."

"What now, mamma?" inquired Nellie.

"Among the letters which came for your husband this morning one was addressed in a feminine handwriting. I steamed it."

"Oh mamma, never!" cried Nellie.

"And read it. Don't look at me as if I was a thief. I'm your own mother and I'm going to protect your interests."

It was signed "Lucia Davenport," it gave her address. It's in the same handwriting as the scrap I found in Walter's coat and it asks your husband to call upon her at three o'clock tomorrow afternoon."

"Oh, why do you resort to these underhanded methods?" wailed poor Nellie, "and what good does it do for me to know all this?"

"Well, if you have any womanly spirit," retorted Mrs. Leeds tartly, "it will lead to your finding out who this mix is. Now don't go to wearing a long face so that young husband of yours suspects that we are advised as to his misdoings. Tomorrow both you and I will see this artful temptress."

Nellie was nearly crushed. She mourned and wept. She could scarcely keep from utterly breaking down before Walter. He received his letter, read it quietly, coolly pocketed it, looked a trifle sad, the watchful Nellie fancied, but he said nothing whatever as to its contents.

"He's done it—we've got him!" rather imperiously proclaimed Mrs. Leeds an hour later.

"What do you mean?" wearily questioned Nellie.

"The letter and the photograph. I searched his old coat. They are gone."

Now then, you pluck up nerve and let me work out this problem."

In her masterful way Mrs. Leeds directed all details. She was in her element, meddling and muddling in the affairs of others. With a quiver of vague pain Nellie noticed that her husband was more particular than usual the next morning as to his attire.

At two o'clock that afternoon she and her mother left the house for the vicinity of the address given in the note to Mr. Brierly. Both were deeply veiled. They found safe covert in the doorway of an unoccupied house and watched the one where the writer of the note resided.

"Don't squirm or get hysterical," directed Mrs. Leeds, as Nellie shrank back with a pitiful whimper.

Her husband was coming down the street. He ascended the steps of the house opposite. He was admitted by a servant. In a few moments he came forth accompanied by a beautiful but sad-faced girl whose general appearance indicated the invalid.

He was the courteous gentleman complete as he offered the girl his arm. They walked slowly along. Walter seemed to do most of the talking. His companion listened with bowed head and more than once applied her handkerchief to her eyes, as though the tears were there.

"For mercy's sake!" exclaimed Mrs. Leeds, at the end of half an hour's cautious pursuit of the pair.

"Why, they are going into a cemetery!" marvelled the bewildered Nellie.

"Strange place for a rendezvous!" pronounced Mrs. Leeds. "This is getting beyond me, I must admit."

Walter and his charge wandered on until they reached a secluded part of the cemetery. There was a rustic seat and there they sat down. From some sheltering foliage concealing them near by, Nellie and her mother saw Walter hand the girl something. They saw, too, that it was the ribbon secured photograph and letter.

The girl cried over them, kissed them. Then, as Walter pointed to a little mound near by, she proceeded alone over to this, knelt beside it and was lost in deep grief.

In a little while the girl, looking subdued and heartbroken, rejoined Walter. They returned the course to her home. As he left the girl she clasped his hand and seemed to be brokenly telling of some overwhelming grief. Then gravely Walter lifted his hat and with somber mien-left the vicinity.

"H'm!" observed Mrs. Leeds, palpably puzzled and disappointed. "Here's a mystery I can't fathom."

"Don't try to," murmured Nellie. "I feel sure we are misjudging Walter."

"He shall confess the truth this very night or I shall take you back home with me!" declared Mrs. Leeds.

But there was no occasion for that. After dinner, as they sat in the living room and Mrs. Leeds was primed for her attack, Walter spoke.

"My dear," he said to his wife, "I had a sad mission today. You remember the old friend I told you of, Gerald Price, who died six months ago?"

"I think I do," murmured Nellie.

"He loved a beautiful young girl, whose parents objected to his addresses. They sent her away for a year and it broke my friend's heart. She returned to the city a few days since and I have executed the mission my friend in dying entrusted to me. It was to tell her how secretly he had resoured a few words she had written and a photograph of herself she had given him, to his last moment. It was a sad task. I took her to his grave today and told her of his constancy. Poor soul! her heart is broken. She is a hopeless invalid and will not long survive the man she loved so devotedly."

"Oh! why did her parents interfere?" breathed Nellie, almost crying.

At this her mother "spunked up." She gave her a withering glance. Next morning she terminated her visit.

Nellie never told Walter of the ordeal through which she had passed. Only, a greater tenderness and strengthened faith came into her heart for the man whom she doubted nevermore.

Flowers and Leaves.

Flowers are produced by the sacrifice of stem and leaves, which subordinate their own functions to the making of seed to carry on the species. In the late summer time, when plants have flowered and set their seed, the leaf spirit seems again to assert itself; and, in many instances, becomes so strong that the miracle of its self-sacrifice is revealed. One often sees roses, after producing perfect blossoms, producing some which push out a small bunch of green leaves from the heart; or, perhaps, the axis of the aborted stem grows right out from the middle and bears a small secondary rosebud. This secondary rose is generally smothered in a calyx more like a conglomeration of leaves than any ordinary calyx, the calyx showing a strong tendency to revert to the leaf form.

Slaves in New England.

It may surprise many of our readers to learn that at one time upward of 3,000 colored persons were held as slaves in Connecticut. The thrifty Boston traders went further than the Connecticut men. They brought sugar from Jamaica, turned it into rum at Boston and Medford, sent the rum back to the west coast of Africa and exchanged it for black men, whom they jammed below decks, transported them to Jamaica and then traded them for more sugar to be made into more rum to be traded for more slaves. And so the traffic continued.—Hartford Connecticut.

A DIFFICULT MISSION

By NAPOLEON S. ZARICK.

Both Rowley and Hart have long honored me with their confidences. Even when we were chums at school I was the repository of their secrets, the mediator in their quarrels.

It was one day when I sat by my studio window that Rowley and Hart arrived together at my door. They sat down. Rowley looked at Hart. Hart returned the compliment. Silence ensued.

"Boys," said I, at length, "you had better toss up for who speaks first."

They grinned uneasily and then Rowley, who is, perhaps, just a thought quicker than Hart, opened the conversation.

"Jack," he began, "you know Miss Annie Seymour?"

I nodded affirmatively.

"Well," he continued, "it's about her. You see, we're both very much in love with her."

"And she?" I asked.

Hart took up the thread. "She has been nice—very nice to both of us," he said. "In fact, Jack, we cannot decide which of us she prefers. And we don't want to take any unfair advantage."

"But—" I began.

"You don't see what we're driving at, eh? Well, I'll explain, if Hart will allow me. We just want you to be the same kind old Jack you've always been. We want you to—to well, dash it all—we want you to find out for us which of the two she really does want to marry."

I sat up, and lit a cigar.

"You see, boys," said I, "there's a little difficulty in the way which you don't seem to have considered. Miss Annie Seymour barely knows me."

"Oh, but she does, and likes you, too!" This from Hart.

"Boys," said I, "it's a ticklish mission, but I promise you I'll do my best."

"Dear me, Mr. Winton! You have been an unjustifiable time about calling."

"My dear Miss Seymour, one cannot set lightly about important functions."

"You call on the muses daily, I am told."

"But they are never at home, I assure you."

"I wish I were a muse," remarked Miss Seymour, with an adorable smile. "But you are," I protested. "You certainly are—the tenth muse. The muse of—"

"Of afternoon tea, of course. Won't you have some tea, Mr. Winton?"

"By the way," was my first shot, "I saw John Hart yesterday."

"Indeed? Sugar, Mr. Winton?"

"And Bob Rowley, too. Saw them both together."

"Really! Cream, Mr. Winton?"

Both of my shots had failed! For a young woman supposed to be deeply interested in two young men, Miss Seymour's matter-of-fact reception of those young men's names seemed singular indeed.

It were useless to detail our conversation. Suffice it that, although I returned again and again to the charge, I failed to arouse in Miss Seymour the slightest evidence of interest either in Hart or Rowley.

And the odd part of it was that she changed the subject from my friends' affairs to mine—displaying, indeed, a flattering, if unaccountable interest in all my humble doings. In the end, I became desperate. Daring tactics, I felt, were the only means at hand.

"Miss Seymour," I said, "you do not seem to be enthusiastic over either 'Bob Rowley or Jack Hart.'"

Up went Miss Seymour's eyebrows.

"Well, hardly," she exclaimed. "I don't see why I should be."

"Now suppose—just suppose—that one of them were to fall hopelessly in love with a certain Miss Seymour, would there be any hope for him?"

Miss Seymour set down her tea cup and looked at me sternly—that is to say, as severely as she could. "Mr. Winton," she remarked, "you were asked to come here and put that question to me!"

"No," I said, "not that one—I have overstepped my mission."

I began studying the shape of my boots, and wondering which was the foot I had just "put into it."

Then there was a little final chat as I took my leave. I don't quite know how it came to pass, but just before I departed Miss Seymour asked me, "You don't read your Longfellow, do you Mr. Winton?"

"Well—no," I replied; "not Shakespeareally, as one might say."

"There is some really excellent common sense in Longfellow. Good-by, Mr. Winton."

About half way down the street I stopped suddenly.

"Longfellow!" I remarked to myself. "Longfellow? Now what has Longfellow got to do with my little schemes? She is not a young woman who makes remarks without reason or connection. And then her look when she said—! I'll swear there is some consoling message for poor Bob and John concealed between the covers of Longfellow!"

And then, all of a sudden, a premonitory thought set my mind awheel.

I hastened home and took down a copy of Longfellow's poems from my library shelf. As fate would have it, I opened the volume at the line, "Why don't you speak for yourself, John?" (Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

THE AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANY

AMERICA'S OPPORTUNITY

By President Woodrow Wilson
From General Federation Magazine
for September

No man can doubt that the immediate future of the world will be crowded with quick changes. Every true lover of America must wish the United States to play a part in those changes which will be worthy of her ideals and her character. Almost alone among the great nations of the world she will be unhampered in meeting a great opportunity.

In the first place, her resources are unimpaired. Not only has the war and all its attendant circumstances made no hurtful drain upon her men or her materials; it has even enhanced her skill and added to her resources, because of the very circumstances of her situation, cut off from her usual trade with many parts of the world and called upon to supply what she never supplied before to the nations engaged in the great struggle not only, but also to her own people. She has developed industries that she before had neglected, has found new uses for her material and new material to use. She has thus been enabled to realize what she can do more fully than ever before, and to do it better than she ever did before. No other nation will stand quite so ready as she to serve the world in every work of peace and development.

In the second place, she will probably of necessity be the chief reliance of the rest of the world in the field of finance. Probably the chief part in supplying the means necessary for the great reconstruction which will have to follow the war will fall to her. When the war began America was, striking the large balance, a debtor nation. When the war closes, she will be a creditor of all the world. Her financiers will have it within their choice to play a part they have never played before in the economic development of other nations and of distant regions of the earth. It is to be hoped that they will have the vision to accept the opportunity with farsighted courage and a quick adaptation to the new conditions.

In the third place, I think it is evident that the United States will understand herself better than she ever did before. The war and all its attendant circumstances have cried her wide awake to both the dangers of her life and its enormous possibilities and advantages. There have been many things to disturb us during these two years of long drawn-out tragedy. We had not realized before that there were certain elements in our citizenship which had not in their heart of hearts devoted themselves in full loyalty and allegiance to the country of their adoption. A new problem of disunion, more subtle, more difficult to meet with direct checkmate and correction than the old problem which culminated in the Civil War, has engaged and disturbed our thought, and we have realized that we must devote a new energy and ardor to binding together the forces which will produce a new union, a union of spirits triumphant over every alien force and sympathy. But this very discovery, this very anxiety, has quickened the pulse of every loyal and devoted American throughout the length and breadth of the land, whether his birthplace was on this side of the water or on the other. A new and wholesome force has arisen amongst us of thoughtful, watchful, energetic patriotism, and I venture to think that the nation is better prepared on that account to face the problems of a new day in which it will marshal all its energies and assemble all its resources to enable the country we love to play the part it should seek to play in the counsels and actions of the great world.

Fortunately, America can play her part in the days to come unselfishly and impartially, because she covets nothing that other nations have unless it be their skill and knowledge in some of the undertakings of science and industry, and these things she can obtain, not by conquest of force, but by the mere careful use of the extraordinary capacity of her people. She can produce like skill and knowledge for herself. That is one of the things these days of struggle and interrupted trade have taught her. She has nothing that she wishes to take away from the other nations of the world, and she is better prepared than she ever was before to make rich contribution to the development of other nations.

The opportunity is at hand, therefore, for which she has waited. Her principles are suited to the freedom of mankind and the peace of the world. She can now exemplify those principles in action with a new leadership, a new opportunity to exhibit them upon a great scale. She can now afford an example of energy in justice as well as in enterprise, in fair and honorable competition, in thoughtful adaptation of her resources to the needs of the world, which may help to inaugurate a new era in the intercourse and friendly interdependence of the peoples of the world.

That she will rise to this great opportunity no man who knows her can doubt. It should be the pride, and thoughtful purpose of every American so to equip himself with knowledge and so to purge his own heart that he may play a suitable part in this rebirth of Americanism.

Children Cry FOR FLETCHER'S CASTORIA

On account of the scarcity of news print paper, which amounts almost to a famine at the present time and affects all newspapers alike. The North American has been obliged to discontinue the privileges heretofore accorded newsdealers and newsboys of returning unsold copies, and will only print the number of papers for which they actually have orders.

It is urged by The North American that readers who have not been in the habit of placing a regular order for delivery of paper Daily and Sunday do so at once, in order to insure receiving the paper without interruption.

If there is any difficulty in securing the paper locally, The North American will welcome a letter explaining the reason.

During the campaign the combination price of The GAZETTE ($1.50) and the North American ($3.00) will be $3.25 per year. This offer must be taken up before election day, November 7.

ANOTHER PROMPT PAYMENT.

Bedford, Pa., August 10, 1916.

Mr. J. Roy Cessna,
Special Agent, Equitable Life Assurance Society,
Dear Sir:—

Accept my thanks for voucher in full settlement of policy No 1,630,434, held by my deceased husband, Samuel S. Whetstone. You will remember when you called at our home ten years ago to see Mr. Whetstone about taking insurance, that I was not in favor of Mr. Whetstone taking a policy. Today you are handing me a voucher which is very much appreciated by me, and I wish to say that I look at life insurance in a different light than I did at that time.

Yours truly,
(Signed) MRS. REBECCA WHETSTONE

Everett, Route 7.
